To Whom It May Concern:

A review of the attached resume will provide a list of skills and education but it will not express my passion for my Catholic faith. I have been committed to sharing that faith with others. I (along with my wife) have taught both my own children and others and continued to educate myself on many aspects of the faith by reading extensively, doing research and attending classes (as you will note by the attachment to my resume). After successfully raising our three sons and committing ourselves to their education through homeschooling, I am hoping for an opportunity to share my knowledge and passion with others.

You will see from my resume that I left the finance and banking industry years ago to both assist in my father's business and to allow myself an opportunity to actively participate in my children's education. After my father's passing and the restructuring of his business, my family and I were faced with a number of life-changing challenges which encouraged me to search for a job opportunity that supports my own personal goals and fulfills my desire to help and inspire others.

I look forward to having the opportunity to speak with your hiring authorities, as I believe my work ethic, enthusiasm and values can only be properly expressed during a personal interview. I look forward to speaking with a representative as soon as possible. Your consideration is greatly appreciated.

*Thanks and God Bless,
Mike Marchand*
